

There are many ways and practices for personal growth and meditation. Although the majority of these practices are helpful there tends to be a strong limiting factor in their helpfulness: They do not tend to meet a person in their life, with where they are and what they are working with. Having come to the insight that many wisdom paths lack a tactful and dynamic nature, the author set out to discover how to integrate many methods of modern psychological inquiry to bring out a more fluid sense of unfolding of his mind into his life. This book is written as a primer to this approach dynamic approach towards self knowledge that many teachers term inquiry. He is a clinical social worker with a history in Zen and the Gurdjieff Work. This book may draw on several spiritual sources but it is intended to be as secular approach as one feels comfortable with.
